Mr. Trump issued the announcement via Twitter just before 10 a.m. ET, hours after the U.S. Commerce Department issued an announcement of its decision to impose the new tariffs.

The president's tweet was also sent from his Mar-a-Lago resort in Florida. In a written statement issued by the White House, Mr. Trump said that his administration will begin taxing the remaining $200 billion worth of goods imported from China this month, and that the tariffs are being put in place in response to China's "unfair trade practices." "It is the policy of the United States to impose reciprocal tariffs against goods sold by China into the United States," Mr. Trump said. "For years China has misappropriated American intellectual property through illegal subsidies and forced technology transfers, constrained U.S. trade and investment, and destroyed or dumped products in the American market with no consequences. The United States is fighting for fair trade and will not accept anything less. We have all the power necessary to confront China and we are now preparing to act on that power," he said. The move came after Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross announced last week that the Commerce Department was considering putting in place the additional tariff. Mr. Ross said in his announcement last week that the additional tariffs will be applied over a period of six months, beginning on Sept. 1
