The Senate approved an amendment late Thursday to block the EPA from defining carbon pollution as a pollutant and requiring energy companies to report emissions and meet federal limits on greenhouse gas emissions from fuel sources. The "Keep Our Air Clean" amendment to an energy bill by Sen. Joe Manchin (D-W.Va.) blocked the EPA from using the so-called endangerment finding to mandate greenhouse gas reductions under existing law and to expand the agency's power to regulate carbon emissions under the Clean Air Act. The House passed the energy bill earlier this week. Despite the amendments, the House still includes a number of provisions that are widely considered trade protections for coal and oil companies. While the House bill is the first to contain such provisions, opponents have said they will continue to work to strip out the provisions. "This bill is filled with dangerous and extreme provisions that would threaten the viability of our coal industry," John Vorys, president of the American Coalition for Clean Coal Electricity, said in a statement. "The bill will increase carbon dioxide pollution and empower unelected bureaucrats to dictate energy policy. We urge the House to reject this bill and move forward with a comprehensive energy bill that will address America's energy future." The amendments were added to the energy bill as part of a continuing effort by Democrats to block EPA rules that would force companies to reduce carbon dioxide emissions from the burning of fuels. Under existing law, EPA can only regulate greenhouse gas emissions under the Clean Air Act if the agency finds that existing sources are harming public health or welfare. The EPA had made clear that it will regulate greenhouse gas emissions under that law. The EPA this month finalized its finding that greenhouse gases endanger public health and welfare. The agency proposed that greenhouse gases and carbon dioxide should be classified as pollutants under the Clean Air Act and that greenhouse gas emissions should be regulated under existing laws. But opponents say that having greenhouse gases be regulated under the Clean Air Act would force energy companies to cut emissions even though they consider carbon dioxide emissions to be beneficial. They argue that forcing companies to cut emissions means that the companies will have to install technologies to reduce emissions of carbon dioxide, a greenhouse gas that contributes to global warming. The largest greenhouse gas contributing to global warming is carbon dioxide, which

On January 16, 2020, a web search for "truecafecrackkeygenserialkey", followed by the serial number "aab345ed07", resulted in a website selling a new product called "Serial Number Decoder". The product claims to decode the serial numbers from the TrueCrypt websites'.dcrypt files (TrueCrypt version 7.1a beta 2 and 8.0a beta 3) and the latest TrueCrypt 7.2 beta version 8.0b beta. None of the websites hosting TrueCrypt's.dcrypt files include the phrase "truecafecrackkeygenserialkey". I am fetching dates from a MSSQL db as varchar(max) column, but not able to convert them using as.character() method. Here is the sample string: D, April 3, 2013 12:00:00 AM What are the options to convert these? I am using R Studio A: This function (from the lubridate package) will read a character string as a date: read.date(text = "Apr 3, 2013 12:00:00 AM", format = "%d %B %Y %I:%M:%S %p") # [1] "2013-04-03 00:00:00 EDT" If the format is incorrect, you could use lubridate's format() method to specify the format: format(read.date(text = "Apr 3, 2013 12:00:00 AM", format = "%d %B, %Y %I:%M:%S %p"), "%d %B %Y %I:%M:%S %p") # [1] "2013 April 3 12:00:00 PM" Value of thyroid stimulating immunoglobulins and thyroid autoantibodies in idiopathic myxedema.
