The Dolorous Face of (R)evolution If you write programming like a carpenter writes a hammer - using simple, easy to understand techniques like "put a column here and a turn there" and "the rest will fall into place after the initial construction" - you can make a building that lasts for many years, and many people can use it. But - and it's a large but - that building becomes a mere building. Most people (including most systems designers and architects) know this to be true. Most people don't want to live in a building that lasts for more than a few years. The tragedy of the Bitcoin system is that the code is akin to that hammer - elegant, fast, and easy to follow and implement. (The expense of this elegance and efficiency has never been shown in terms of creating bugs - the cost of fixing those bugs is hidden in the proof of work that must be done to add the change, resulting in the infamous block reward.) Have Never Seen Before... by Brent Woodhouse (click on any thumbnail for a larger image) Part I: The Great Depression In October 1929 the stock market crashed, ostensibly over excessive speculation in risky stocks like Enron and Harken Energy. It turned out that the collapse actually had more to do with corruption and crime than with rational economic decisions. For example, a few weeks before the crash a convicted burglar was found during an inventory review at the Chicago headquarters of Smith Barney & Co., one of the big investment banks handling the speculation. He was carrying a list of names that included the names of about 2,300 of the top stock market investors in the country. (Daniel Carr, inventor of the stock ticker, stands out on that list.) The bottom fell out of the stock market in early 1930, forcing the panic of the Great Depression. Within eight months about 22,000 businesses had gone under (and had to be taken over by Uncle Sam). 31,000 Children in Louisiana...The Great Depression For about three years Uncle Sam had given his unemployed workers money and food so they would not starve to death and would just get back on their feet. The Children's Bureau of New York State estimated that the total number of children who were in Louisiana on December 31, 1932--three years into the Depression--was nearly 31,000. Some of them were staying with relatives at their old places, but many had been sent to camps and orphanages. (From the front page of the August 18, 1932, issue of the Now or Never Woman's Club magazine, Louisiana State Childwelfare Association Bulletin. Source: Louisiana State Archives, New Orleans, and American Institute of Family Relations.) Baby Goat Sold as Wool... The largest problem in the dairy industry in the late 1920s and early 1930s was the hundreds of thousands of baby goats that were born every year. Undoubtedly many owners simply raised them as pets or for milk. Others sold them to commercial milk producers. (The Washington Post, Sept. 2, 1932). The Sunday Norfolk Virginian-

Pilot, November 19, 1931, quoted an official at the Virginia Dairy Association: "One man paid $70. for a doe that could yield 150 pounds, four times as much as his girl could who couldn't have more than 1/3 that amount." Salesmen would tell people that the finest meat goats gave about as much milk as 50 Holsteins. Often goats kids were thrown into
