and customers with a new health initiative that will allow all restaurant workers to take unlimited paid sick days. With the new initiative, Taco Bell expects to see substantial positive benefits in guest satisfaction, employee productivity and reduced turnover as a result of increased employee trust in the company, and a healthier work environment overall. Throughout the fast food industry, only small to mid-size chains have had paid sick days, and often with limited employee experience.

By setting paid sick leave policies as a direct benefit for all restaurant employees, Taco Bell is helping to support its frontline workers and give them the time they need to take care of themselves when they need it. Bell has also made substantial investments in bringing health and wellness products to its restaurant workers through its partnership with BIOVIA Medical to provide on-site optometry care for its U.S. locations. The partnership also includes free unlimited dry cleaning service, and free management training. “As a company, we recognize the value of a healthy and fair work environment, and we’re proud that our restaurant workers will now have the opportunity to take time off when they need it,” said Dave Hammerstrom, CEO of

Taco Bell, with BIOVIA Medical. “We want to be the best fast food restaurant in America, and we look forward to continuing to partner with BIOVIA in supporting the health and well-being of our restaurant workers.” In February, the Taco Bell franchise owner in New Hampshire became the first to receive approval from the state Department of Labor for paid sick leave for restaurant workers. All other New Hampshire municipalities approved a paid sick leave ordinance to extend hours of operation to 8 p.m. in order to allow
