For this reason, it is widely studied and described in both experimental and analytical research. In the present study, representative structural data of a trabecular bone, obtained from a dual-energy X-ray absorptiometry (DXA) measurement and the results of an atomic force microscopy (AFM) measurement, were used in a trabecular biological image analysis. Trabecular bone is made of a hierarchical structure of fibrous or filamentous osseous lamellae, which are bound by an interlamellar matrix. Nevertheless, it is a complex three-dimensional structure, and the visualization of these types of structure from a two-dimensional image format is very difficult. Here, we propose a technique and software system that perform analyses of trabecular bone. The software obtains the surface of a trabecular bone and analyzes its uniaxial embedded structure as a pair of orthogonal bundles. In the analysis, an axis, which is the connecting line between the innermost projections

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an electron donating compound, an organic light emitting element, an electron donating compound thin film, and an organic light emitting element. 2. Description of the Related Art A light emitting element in which a layer containing an organic compound having a light emitting property is provided between a pair of electrodes and the light emission of the layer is utilized is called an organic light emitting element. When the emission voltage is applied between the pair of electrodes, electrons injected from the cathode and holes injected from the anode are brought into the light emitting layer and recombined to form excitons. The energy which is released by the excitons is used for the light emission. Also, in the organic light emitting element, it has been known that the emission efficiency can be improved by doping a phosphorescent material in the light emitting layer or bringing a host material and a phosphorescent material into a host/phosphorescent combination. The organic light emitting element includes a light emitting element, an electron donor compound, an organic emission layer containing an organic light emitting substance, and a counter electrode layer. In these layers, a layer containing an organic compound having a high work function, for example, LiF, Al or Li<sub>2</sub>O is inserted between the anode and the electron donor compound. When the anode is a transparent electrode, that is, a transparent anode, it is desired that the light emitted from the light emitting element is emitted efficiently without being absorbed by the anode, and thus the light emitting element has been designed with the use of various materials. When the light emitting element using LiF is compared to an element using Li<sub>2</sub>O in terms of light emitting performance, the emission wavelength of LiF is shorter than that of Li<sub>2</sub>O. However, since LiF has a higher work function than that of Li<sub>2</sub>O, LiF has a lower electrical conductivity

Q: Cordova Android - Support library not found I have ported Cordova 3.2.0 from the 4.0.x branch to the 4.3.1 branch, and at my CI I get this error on the Android mobile device: Failed to launch
/tmp/build-9b43f3f937f5cf8c1d98c670273282c4/platforms/android/build/outputs/apk/release/app-release-unsigned.apk' on 'REF_GEN3-3310-200077_CordovaLib' I have checked the issue, found that this error seems to be caused by the missing adb.jar. Cordova 3.2.0 did have this, but after downloading the cordova-android from the 4.3.1 branch, this jar wasn't there. So I copied the adb.jar from the 4.3.1 branch and the build has succeeded. Now the error has disappeared, but the build is failing with this error now: FAILURE: Build failed with an exception. * What went wrong: Execution failed for task ':prepareComAndroidSupportAppcompatV72311Library'. * Try: Run with --stacktrace option to get the stack trace. Run with --info or --debug option to get more log output. This corresponds to the first line. How do I solve this? A: In the build.gradle file (app/build.gradle): Add this line to Top-level project definition: buildscript {
