Rolling Ball is an award-winning game published by Maestria where you play in an environment reminiscent of the 90s game show by the same name. Rolling the ball in the direction of the target, you complete a classic game shown by the famous host, who will pose additional challenges and obstacles as you get closer to the goal. Inspired by the TV show, you will be sure to enjoy playing Rolling Ball, as you will not be able to stop playing until you reach the goal! Instructions: * RMB or left click and mouse to jump * Arrow keys to move * Mouse wheel to roll * Arrows to jump, look for an opening to roll the ball * Left click to release the ball Keyboard Input (must be a keyboard and not a gamepad): * CTRL+RMB or left click with the mouse to jump * SPACE to release the ball * Arrows to jump, look for an opening to roll the ball * Left click to release the ball * Pause to reset the game Check out the following short documentary film produced by the folks at The Atlantic Center for Public Policy on the financing of the "storm sewers" (aka low-income housing) program. The "storm sewers" program was actually a chapter of what was originally known as the Federal Emergency Management Agency's "Section 519" program. The program was founded in 1972 and ran through the 1980s. It focused on providing low-income housing in areas of urban areas that were being hit hard by tornadoes, hurricanes, and flood waters. It was one of the few housing programs to focus on the needs of low-income families. Although the program had many critics, it was actually pretty successful. The program actually helped 4.5 million low-income families over the course of its 40 years of existence. The program received attention in the '70s, which ultimately led to its funding being cut. The government never officially released information regarding the program, but here's what some experts have known about it over the years. When the program was first announced, it was estimated to cost as much as $100 million to construct 2,000 houses at one time. To put that in perspective, that's the equivalent of around $100 million in 2005 dollars. The program was actually a bit controversial because, initially, at least, there was not a set quota

I need to match each word in one line of a file with the words in another line of a different file. The file is just one big word separated by a space, so I'd like to match each word. /word1/ with: word1 word1 word1 word1 word1 word1 word1 word1 Example: cat ips.txt | awk '/word1/ {print $1}' word1 word1 word1 word1 word1 word1 word1 word1 I've tried gsub("/word1/", "", getline(1)) but didn't work. A: What about this? $ sed -n '/word1/{s/ / /;p}' file word1 word1 word1 word1 word1 word1 word1 or in shell: sed -n '/word1/{s/ / /

New bossbaddie-O(facebook.com/classicalmastercakes) #1,031 5/13/18 - 11:19 AM The usual FB practice is: Run up a hill for 15 days straight, eat ramen, spend the time reading books, do a bit of magic, look cool, you know, normal stuff. It was late April when we were informed by the Big Bossbaddie that there was more digging to be done than anticipated, so everyone started working 7 days a week. The doubles were for keeping routine; 7 plays a day sort of thing. Plus we were working on the cover...which in and of itself wasn't a problem..but we got to add being impressed with ourselves for that, the entire office was. So, we had pretty much completed digging the hole for the Tomb the next day, and the Tomb Master was wondering where the Grave Digger was..and we were feeling smug. That is, until we did the step equivalent of sticking our fingers in dry pancakes, except these were stale coconuts. The stench was almost more than we could stand. The deathstench of the Tomb Retortion was so horrible, we all almost vomited. But that was the least of our problems. Long after you would assume that an HR investigator has the corpse exhumed because of it's stench...no one had the stomach to begin exhuming. ALL of us had duties that demanded attention...but we did make time, if just a few minutes, to get the digster to come by. And honestly, who was to know? We just thought we smelled death! We all sure thought we knew what it smelled like..we just had no idea..and none of us wanted to be the one. But we also didn't want something unexpected to break the dig..(oh, and the smell wasn't the cause of the dig manager's illness...which he probably hid when all of us showed up.) So we all hope that we aren't in the presence of a loved one here. But the Tomb Retortion stinks just as bad. Fact is, we broke ground in late April, the entire staff was established in early May, and we're
