Dots and Dashes was first published by John Horton on the Macintosh in 1993. John Horton later released a version of the game for the Microsoft Windows computer operating system in 1998, and in 2005 he re-released the game for the Windows Mobile platform, re-using the same source code from the earlier Macintosh release. In 2011 John Horton published an updated version of the classic game (now known as Dots and Boxes) for the Apple iPad, using the iOS development system. The game was later published by Spreadsheet Software in 2010. John Horton last published a version of the Dots and Boxes game in 2014 for Android (see Dots and Boxes: Android). Like other games in the original Dot Grid line, Dots and Boxes offers a number of different game play styles, from competitive to cooperative, but as it can only offer these styles as a series of different difficulty levels or computer playing levels, this game is essentially only for multiplayer play. Why play the game: The game's play, as with many other games, really comes down to the question, what do you want to be doing when you are finished with your busy workday? Some will be racing to find the nearest PC to play a game while other will be browsing a variety of websites. You get the idea. Regardless, once you are finished, why not play the game? No "work" involved. All you need is a computer with internet access, a good connection, and you are all set. Well, almost all set. The game does require some setup at the beginning to allow for a variety of computers to connect to it, and to allow for hints and computer guesses/plays. Who should play: To answer the question, why play, the game is usually best for those who can't sit around and play Solitaire (the original Solitaire). Rather than being those people who just want to be fiddling with something, playing the game instead means you will actually be doing something - for a short time. And who doesn't want to do that? What to do: Regardless of your answer to the question, "why play the game", there is some work to do in preparation for the game's start. This is especially true if you want to play a computer game, as you need to either have a friends computer on the internet, or find a computer somewhere that can be connected to your LAN (Local Area Network). Before playing the game

Visit any voxel website, import any model and enjoy it with this viewer. It supports non-free voxel formats as well. (VoxVR, Magica Voxel, Qubicle etc.) PS, VoxVR is more than just a viewer. If you want to build from the ground up, it's a powerful tool which can be used to import models into real-time software like the QuickBASIC Engine. If you have any voxel files that you would like to share with others, I encourage you to upload them on the Voxel Art site, by selecting the 'Upload Models' button on the top left: To import a model from within VoxVR, select 'Build' from the menu and select 'Load Model'. From here you can select an existing model, or enter a file path to a model. This viewer enables you to download models from other websites such as Shapeways or I have even seen a couple of uploads from machinima sites. Any comments are welcome Support Forum: If you have a question on how to use the software or have encountered some bug, visit the forum. You are welcome to leave a comment there as well. The future of racing is here, and it's called MOTORHEAD. This game allows you to hop in one of 10 streamlined racers and test your skills on eight obstacle-filled courses that wind through urban, desert, and seaside terrain. Play modes include the standard Time Attack, Single Race, League, and Head-to-Head competition found in any decent racing game. One unique feature of MOTORHEAD is that you can choose between 30 or 60 frames per second. Choosing 60fps gives the game a polished look, but you're limited to a three-car field. While going with 30fps hurts in the visual department, it does expand the field to seven cars; you'll probably want to experiment with both to figure out which one works best for you. If you're interested in making your PC into a high-tech arcade game system, this setup guide will show you how. It's the same set up used by Xbox game designer. i have done this with my laptop at my desk without the help of anyone else. I was concerned about the look of having an LCD projector on my desk and a computer display underneath. So i set the projector to the very top left corner of the room and put a big sheet of cardboard in front of it to create a "black square" with no reflections or distortion. Im using a Macbook Pro with a 17" screen and have it positioned 6.5 inches from the front of the 15" Acer LCD. I have also tried this in the living room with a small 4' screen. I am using an Acer Aspire V5 laptop with two external 5400 rpm DVD drives and it runs much slower in this configuration. Sometimes I use the projector, sometimes the laptop display. The setup i use uses the laptop display and a projector for games like Manhunt, Max Payne and such with high resolution textures in games. I basically like the mobile feeling and the larger monitor in my game room. I did not want to have the on screen display of game performance statistics and such. My games are all running at over 150 FPS. I use the mouse when i need to and don't need to use a keyboard. If you are useing an LCD projector it would be worth getting a USB keyboard (wireless and wired are possible) and get the wireless mouse setup, simple, but free, and with a range of 100' or more. So my project is to get my father to do this at work
