What's the best way to convert 0.0-1.0 to 0-100? I've tried the following but this doesn't work as intended. A = 0:0.01:1; B = 0:0.01:1; % convert to 0-100 scale C = round(sum(bsxfun(@times,A,B))/(2*sum(bsxfun(@times,1,A)) - 1)); Thanks. A: Suppose the input is: A = [0 0.5 0.9]; The output should be: B = 0:0.01:100; Here is a solution: x = bsxfun(@times,1,A); y =

bsxfun(@times,x,A); B = (2*y - 1)*100; input but can't find an update. Anyone willing to shed some light on this issue? I'm officially running an empty stomach right now and this is the last thing I want to do. I'm still experiencing a lot of cramps, and I'm going through this cycle over and over and over again, and I'm wondering if I should just admit defeat, and come off the Pill. Thanks for your time.

I'll keep looking around, but your assistance would be greatly appreciated. Liver resection for cancer: expansion of the indications.

Liver resections for cancer currently range from a palliative procedure to a curative operation. The indications to be selected are principally based on general considerations such as the availability of palliative therapy in the community, the extent of the disease and the patient's condition. Apart from surgical considerations (extent of disease
