Combination antiretroviral therapy is regarded as a major contributor to the success of combination antiretroviral therapy. However, most current antiretroviral therapy regimens exhibit low genetic barrier and are often associated with treatment-limiting adverse events and/or therapeutic failure. In the present retrospective, open-label study, 112 treatment-naïve HIV-positive patients were randomly assigned to initiate antiretroviral therapy with single-tablet regimens of tenofovir disoproxil fumarate/emtricitabine/efavirenz (TFV/FTC/EFV, n = 40), tenofovir alafenamide/emtricitabine/efavirenz (TAF/FTC/EFV, n = 40), tenofovir disoproxil fumarate/emtricitabine/lopinavir/ritonavir (TDF/FTC/LPV/r, n = 32), tenofovir alafenamide/emtricitabine/lopinavir/ritonavir (TAF/FTC/LPV/r, n = 32), or abacavir/lamivudine/lopinavir/ritonav
