HD.Q: RSS website for Ubuntu I can't find a free RSS website for Ubuntu, which displays news about my native language. I'm looking for something like rss2xml. Thanks! A: RSS is news and information in a specific format so finding news about your language is a specific task. Any news website is a potential resource. Popular and/or well-known is generally safe. A search on Google Books for "RSS feed ubuntu" should get you a list of such sites. I can't speak for each one. [Disclaimer: I'm an avid user of Google Reader; I'm not recommending this for RSS readers.] Sino-Tibetan Languages Group The Sino-Tibetan Languages Group (often shortened to STLG or S-T), is an umbrella term for a group of languages and families within the large Sino-Tibetan language family. Its distinguishing feature is the presence of tonal and/or pitch-alternation in some or all of its parts. Their cognates are found in other languages within the Sino-Tibetan family, including the Sino-Tibetan languages; the Sal languages; the Khoisan languages; and the neighbouring Austronesian family, especially in Madagascar, the Miao languages, and Southeast Asia. The Sino-Tibetan languages include the four Great families Sino-Tibetan languages, the six Sal languages of the Himalayas, and eight of the Tani languages of the Indian subcontinent (some subsumed as the Tani-Himalayas languages). Their speakers are referred to as Sinitic peoples. Structure The term is defined in a way to encompass at least the following: Sino-Tibetan languages proper Sal languages (Himalayas languages, Central and West Asian languages of Pakistan, Afghanistan and Armenia, etc.) Sino-Tibetan proper (includes cognates with the STLG) Demographics According to Ethnologue, the STLG itself numbered 40 million speakers in 2001. The Sal group alone was spoken by 22 million in 2010. The Central Asian Sino-Tibetan languages d0c515b9f4

For example, one area of our code base which I am most proud of is our custom-built, modular query execution framework. The biggest benefit of this system is that we can use the same programming language and query description language to query most of the data in our system. We can also capture the state of our query execution and track results as individual queries are executed. Our query framework's design makes it extremely flexible and easy to extend to meet new requirements. While we can retrieve information from our system using any of a wide variety of languages (including Java and Scala), we usually use a query language that has been designed for relational data (such as SQL). Even with a large number of SQL dialects, the query language we use allows us to use the
