The aim of this meta-analysis was to determine the relative risk of surgicalsite infections (SSI) in patients who used either sterile dressings or antiseptic soap for the preoperative cleansing of the surgical site. The outcomes of interest were SSI and infection-related readmissions. All included studies were randomized controlled trials comparing the use of sterile dressings and antiseptic soap in adult patients undergoing foot surgery. Two authors independently extracted data from each study and assigned study quality using Cochrane risk-of-bias criteria. Twenty-one studies with a total of 6059 patients were included in the meta-analysis. The overall risk of bias of the included studies was low. The pooled odds ratio (OR) for patients who used sterile dressings to clean their surgical site compared with those who used antiseptic soap was 0.28 (95% confidence interval [CI] 0.18, 0.42, p
