Photoshop is an image editing software. It works with raster images and supports layers for editing. It supports PNG, JPEG, and BMP image formats. It is available in version 8 and above. Photoshop supports the following applications: Adobe Acrobat Reader, Adobe Illustrator, Adobe InDesign, Adobe Photoshop, Adobe Fireworks, Adobe Flash, Adobe

---

Dreamweaver, Adobe Premiere Pro, Adobe Bridge, Adobe Flash Builder, Adobe ColdFusion, and Photoshop Elements. Note: Photoshop is actually a design and illustration program developed by Adobe; it was originally a commercial product for Windows that adds object-oriented features. However, it's not hard to use Photoshop for other reasons, and this guide covers that use as well.

Photoshop's key features There are many key features that can be used for image editing in Photoshop. For the most part, these features can be used for both positive and negative image editing. Sometimes you may need to edit an image until it's just right, but sometimes you may need to take a negative image and make it into something more artistic. Editing is using tools to modify an image's characteristics. Tools are usually found in the Tools menu at the top of the Photoshop interface. Some tools require you to click on the tool first before using it, and others will become active automatically when you select an area of an image. Layers allow you to edit an image in layers. The image is comprised of layers and each layer may have its own functions and attributes. You can move, resize, and change the color, opacity, and other properties of layers and they can all interact together. You can arrange the layers in stacks, placing related layers close to each other. Draw tools (pencil, brush, and pen) and some other tools can be used on the Canvas (or layer's) layer only. Clipping paths and masks are parts of the layer that are not seen in an image.

---

Clipping paths can be used to select specific areas of an image and can be used as the frame for an image. Photoshop has a large number of filters. These filters are found in the Filter menu. You can save an image to a number of file formats. Also, you can print, copy, and share images. Using the features Photoshop can be used for many different reasons, and this guide covers only a few of them. Check back often as we will add more

Comparison of three HIV-1 diagnostic assays and corresponding viral load values in a large reference panel of serum samples: a collaborative study. For this study, 257 HIV-1-positive specimens with quantified viral load values in serum were tested for sensitivity and specificity with three immunoassays, the Abbott enzyme-immunoassay (EIA), the SD Bioline and the Biotec EIA. The results are presented for the three assays and for various combinations of assays, one positive and one negative test, for both total and HIV-1-positive samples. Concordance between assays was estimated by the kappa coefficient. Performance characteristics for the determination of a positive test result varied considerably between all three assays (kappa coefficient from 0.43 to 0.65). A similar trend was found for the determination of the presence of HIV-1 (kappa coefficient from 0.12 to 0.38). For the determination of a negative test result, agreement was slightly better with the SD Bioline (kappa coefficient from 0.55 to 0.60). The kappa coefficients were considerably improved when testing was performed with a combination of two assays (SD Bioline + EIA

---

positive, SD Bioline + EIA negative, or Biotec + EIA positive and SD Bioline + EIA negative) with kappa values  $>$ $0.77$  (SD Bioline + EIA). The respective total concordance rates were  $0.97$ ,  $0.93$  and  $0.95$ .
Our findings demonstrate an unsatisfactory performance of each of the three assays with respect to the ability to detect the presence or absence of HIV-1. For high-concentration specimens ( $CD4 > 200$ ), the Biotec EIA seems to be a suitable alternative for first-line testing.

The panel discussion, titled “Social Media Is Not a Crime,” was co-sponsored by the College of Arts and Sciences in partnership with the College of Communication and Center for the Study of Philanthropy. University officials said the experience drew a large turnout, with 12 students and five Penn professors in attendance. The six-hour event included speakers and panelists discussing issues surrounding social media and the media's relationship with the Internet. "Social media and media outlets have shaped our world in many important ways, as we live and work and learn each day," said longtime college faculty member Bob Schiffman, who moderated the event. "This discussion was designed to help all of us better understand the evolving landscape." Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences

Robert H. Smith Jr. said the panel represented a highly productive effort. “Social media and journalistic issues have long been topics of significant interest to me and my colleagues in the College of Arts and Sciences,” Smith said. “The collaboration between the Journalism, Health Sciences, and Design Interdepartmental Forum and the College of Arts and Sciences in hosting this event was extremely well received. “We are all in this together as we address the challenges and opportunities created by new media outlets.” The panelists attended each other’s class lectures and offered constructive feedback, said college Dean Arnold D. Hirsch. “This presentation was a valuable learning experience for all the participants,” Hirsch said. “We came away with a better sense of our many challenges and opportunities, and were encouraged by their engagement and suggestions.” Penn Professor of Journalism Mark Schreiber was invited to attend by the College of Arts and Sciences. “The ability to share thoughts and experience with peers, including those at other institutions in the world, is one of the cornerstones of the Penn faculty network,” Schreiber said. “Social media education is a topic that is critical to the institution, and the College of
