But the overlay doesn't work inside frames. Is there any way to make it work inside frames? Simple demo A: The problem is the definition of the overlay. It uses noContentPadding, and this has bigger borders than normal borders. It is possible to make it work, but only if you cancel the NoCalcPadding property. Chronic kidney disease is highly prevalent worldwide and carries an immense social and economic burden. Chronic kidney disease develops either as a result of a long-standing disease, referred to as CKD, or as a result of an acute insult, referred to as AKI. In the United States alone, it is estimated that there are more than 25 million people with CKD and another 500,000 patients require dialysis, costing the healthcare system more than $20 billion per year. CKD is defined as damage to the kidney occurring over a period of months or years. CKD is classified into four stages: Stage 1 - increasing damage to the kidney; Stage 2 - moderately reduced kidney function; Stage 3 - mildly reduced kidney function; and Stage 4 - end stage kidney disease wherein the only functioning kidney is not able to carry out its normal functions. The pathophysiology of CKD and AKI is complex, involving nephron loss, proteinuria, glomerular filtration barrier dysfunction
