Report of 28 cases]. 28 cases of brain infarction in young males (less than 30 years old) are reported. They represent 27.9% of the 204 cases of brain infarction seen in our unit in the years 1976-1981. Three quarters were due to stroke; the remainder were due to cerebral trauma. The majority of these young patients were under 65. The pattern of lateralisation was similar in these patients and in the general population (Treatment of Infarcts in young adults in five European countries, N. M. Ghez et al., Brain 102, 723-737 (1979), only 15% of the patients were left-handed. They were significantly younger and more often had hypertension, cerebral atherosclerosis, cardiac disease, tobacco and alcohol abuse. The annual risk of brain infarcts has been estimated to be higher in young men than in the general population. The comparison of our 28 cases with a series of 1376 similar cases in the literature showed several typical features. The mortality was 38.1%. Intensive intravenous heparinisation was associated with lower mortality and better functional outcome. Only 27 of the 28 patients were seen by a vascular neurologist.Q: How to find application startup by calling the file which contains the executable in the path?
