===== Racemase is a novel, human, lysine-specific peptidase first identified in Burkitt's lymphoma in 1990
\\[@R1\\]. Racemase is an intracellular enzyme that converts D- to L-amino acids of proteins \\[@R2\\]. Racemase is found only in humans \\[@R3\\]. It is composed of a single polypeptide of 792 amino acids with a molecular mass of ~97 kDa. Racemase activity has been detected in several human tissues including brain, pancreas, spleen and kidney, but it is least active in liver and is not detectable in kidney cortex (our unpublished observation). There is only one single functional gene for racemase. The protein contains three highly conserved regions (CRs), CR1, CR2 and CR3 \\[@R3\\]. CR1 of about 36 kDa contains a peptidase motif (DxSxGxR) and is responsible for the catalytic activity of the enzyme \\[@R3\\]. CR3, which is of variable length and has also been identified as a Zn-binding motif, contains the N-terminal 100 amino acids which is extremely rich in glutamine and the terminal residues are N-terminally blocked by a dioxygenase \\[@R3\\]. CR3 has been identified as the Zn-binding region of racemase. In addition, a nuclear localization signal has been identified at aa 382-386 \\[@R3\\]. Racemase is induced by c-myc and functions in combination with the proto-oncogene c-myc in the pathway of a number of biological processes, including apoptosis, differentiation, proliferation, transcription, splicing, translation, stability and secretion of proteins \\[@R4]-[@R7\\]. Zn-binding peptides are potent inhibitors of racemase \\[@R8\\]. Other important sequences which have also been shown to
