Please Feel Free to Ask Questions. Argentine President Cristina Fernandez Kirchner's government announced a new national identity card, with a range of biometric features, in what she described as a "first step" to become a "biometric society". The government said on Tuesday that a computer generated image of the new card would replace the traditional one, which is printed by government printers and has been widely criticized for its poor security and lack of biometric privacy protections. It is not clear what functions the new card will have beyond serving as a replacement for the traditional one. Some aspects of the previous card will continue: the national identity card number, the holder's date of birth, the name and address of the holder and the type of document that it covers.
