In my project I have the exe file created. This exe runs in web browser and loads a web page. Now my problem is if I copy the source code from exe location (c:\projct\src) to web project (c:\webproject\src) then web project does not runs. This code is okay with visual studio 2008 but it gives error in visual studio 2010. I also try to copy this code with vcpkg.exe (vcpkg 0.2.1) but it give error "The file or directory 'c:\projct\src\sampleproject.zip' cannot be copied to 'c:\webproject\src' because it is on a UNC share." I try to add web project to the exe project and do a build. What is the best practice for copying source code from exe project to web project? I have a static web site where I load my exe project and it loads web page. After pressing a button there is a need to load some data from exe project. So here this exe project source code is copied to web project and load c# code to get the data. But web project dont runs. Any suggestion what should I do? A: You have to build the web project first. If you have it built your project should be properly configured. Islamabad: The government decided to hire Urdu and English speaking Pakistani nationals in the federal public service to ensure the cultural identity of federal ministries, as well as to bring about a change in its English speaking policies. For the first time in the history of the country, the culture secretary has issued two memos (one in Urdu and one in English) regarding the need for change in this regard. 595f342e71
